

Dear Mr. Spencer,

The answer to your questions of 25 April 2020 are below.

I also have some further questions for you which I would like answered before you publish your article. In your previous questions (on 3, 5, 9, 20) you referred to "court records." Please could you specify exactly which court records you refer to, so that we can properly address your query.

Please let me know if you have any further questions.

Issue 1: Beating

In your first question, you ask:

DELMORE: "First, regarding your description of Magnitsky being beaten to death, I wanted to clarify and give you a chance to answer. We cited the Public Oversight Commission for Human Rights Clearance in Moscow Detention Centers, which examined Magnitsky's treatment in jail, and is here in English (<http://online.wsj.com/public/resources/documents/PR020096229>).

<http://frontrun-untouchables.com/story/524.pdf> That report, as we said, concludes Magnitsky died as a result of medical neglect and makes no mention of beating. Your attorney appeared to be referencing a different report, by the Presidential Council for Human Rights, titled, "Preliminary Conclusion of the working group on the study of circumstances of Sergei Magnitsky's death," <http://frontrun-untouchables.com/frontrun/Civil-Rights-Council-conclusion-report-executive-summary-0910.pdf>. The latter report says he was deprived of medical care, and that "there is reasonable suspicion to believe that the death was triggered by beating." However, the head of the working group, Bill Kalanov, now repeats that and other conclusions in the report, which he said were always considered preliminary. In a recent official plea to Prosecutor's lawyers and that in U.S. district court, Kalanov said some of the report's conclusions were "legal verbatim," from documents submitted by you and your associates. In an interview with NBC News, Kalanov said his panel found "no evidence whatsoever about beating." The results of official forensic expertise that used original biological materials showed no evidence of beatings." I wanted to give you a chance to comment on Kalanov's remarks.

SPENCER: My comments on Kalanov's remarks that his panel found "no evidence whatsoever about beating."

The results of official forensic expertise that used original biological materials showed no evidence of beating?" are as follows:

Kalanov's current remarks are in direct contradiction to the 2011 Presidential Human Rights Council Report the Russian state forensic medical examination of Sergei Magnitsky; Medical expertise No
