In the country where tax evasion is no crime, Swiss private banks are unrepentant about siphoning off other governments' income

Critics of Switzerland would say that the country and its banks are running an anti-social enterprise, in effect picking billions of dollars a year out of the pockets of others. It was the opinion of Switzerland that Britain's prime minister, Gordon Brown, ought to raise in parliament yesterday, as he attempted to assure critics that he was doing something positive against tax avoidance.

The Swiss openly assist not merely legal tax avoidance but also the deliberate concealment of wealth for the purpose of evading tax - something regarded as a crime all over the developed world. Swiss authorities have been stalled and even sabotaged efforts to stop this drain of mobile cash. The German finance minister last year called for Switzerland to be officially named and shamed as an uncooperative tax haven.

Swiss bankers themselves estimate that they hold at least 60% of the estimated $1.5 trillion of personal wealth hidden in the world's tax havens. Konrad Henniger, president of the Swiss private bankers' association, has said: "The large majority of foreign investors with money placed in Switzerland evades taxes."

And he remains unapologetic. He acknowledged to the Guardian that Swiss banks siphon off other governments' revenue.
