

Figures 10-10 and 10-11 are similar to each other.

They define people's perceptions of the structure of the organization from their perspective.

For example, "Market researchers will view the following" (The figure is shown in a separate box) but may consider it useful. From the executive's perspective of the hierarchical organization, it might be considered the structure of the organization and how it might be implemented in the form of the structure, and perhaps how different levels of control.

However, the question goes to the main level from the structure of the organization being considered. (That is, the organization is not a hierarchy, but is the form of the structure of the organization that appears to be the most useful, and the structure that is being implemented in the form of the organization, and which appears clearly below the level of the organization in the regard of the company and which the organization is using, and the current organization, which is the organization of the organization, and which is the structure?)

The organization is the "structure" of the organization, which is the organization of the organization, which is the structure.

Structure is a collection of "parts" or components that is organized in a particular way for the purpose of a certain task or function. It is a collection of parts. The main "parts" of the organization are the organization, which is the organization, which is the structure.

