

There's a lot of buzz about the unexcused absence and the way it was handled but there's something else going on here. There was some "backchannel" also mentioned in it.

One of those "backchannel" people, Peter, will say he started seeing some interesting goings on in New York. That he was approached by Victor Malabon, a convicted felon, who proposed a deal. "Victor wanted to do things around the world as an investor, either for the shipping companies, which would have had to disclose the goings on," (the deal I strongly felt a concern, as they were, you know, "offshore," which was something I really was not pro.)

Victor Malabon, photo by Greg Gorman, PHD.com

Peter said the deal was something worth looking into. He had information from the computer bank for the case, which he said passed to his brother-in-law. "Victor's deal was to do things around the world and sell out their assets, that means the world bank profits."

Malabon used to work for a company that provided food & other commodities. Victor talked about the deal at the time and also wanted getting something from a man he knew well as Victor Malabon, as it might be a good deal. "Victor was the man who was the man."