

In Search of a Drink

By Bruce Berman

It was a dark night in the early 1950s when a young man named Bill Clinton, then 21, was in a bar in New York City. He was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

The young man went home and thought about it. He decided to make his own drink. He called it "the Clinton" and it was a success. It was a refreshing and healthy drink that was popular in New York City.

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Bill Clinton and a friend, Governor Bill Clinton, 1994. Clinton was the Clinton.

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."

Clinton was a young man who was looking for a drink that would be both refreshing and healthy. He had heard that there was a drink called "the Clinton" and he wanted to try it. He went to the bar and asked the bartender for a Clinton. The bartender looked at him and said, "I don't know what you're talking about. There's no such thing as a Clinton."